Gender Pay Gap Reporting

Gender pay gap reporting requires employers with 250 or more employees to publish statutory calculations every year showing how large the pay gap is between their male and female employees. The gender pay gap is not about equal pay but is the difference in the average pay and bonuses between all men and all women across our business.

Why we have a Gender Pay Gap

Through a practice of job evaluation, benchmarking and regular reviews Sika is confident that men and women are paid equally for equivalent work carried out across the company.

Our mean pay gap at 7.5% and our median pay gap at 4.7% are low compared to the UK average.

The main reasons for our gender pay gap are:

- we currently employ fewer women than men (females account for 15% of the total workforce at the snapshot date)
- we currently have fewer women than men in senior roles (and senior roles attract higher salaries)

We find this to be reflective of the construction industry in general however the overall effect is reduced by the distribution of men working in lower quartile roles compared to women. This also explains the negative mean bonus gap at -2.3% and median bonus gap at -10.7% as the roles which attract bonus tend to operate in the upper quartiles for women and are more widely distributed across quartiles for men.

How we are addressing the Gender Pay Gap

We are confident that our pay and bonus gaps are based on the distribution of men and women across the different levels of our business and not attributed to our pay policies. It is by tackling this distribution and increasing the number of women in our business that we can further close our gender pay gap.

We see a future for women in the construction industry and we are keen to assist with that progression:

- we aim to recruit from the widest possible talent pool and are committed to the principle of equal opportunities
- we aim for strong employee retention, promote flexible working and enhance family friendly policies
- we support all employees with their development needs and invest greatly in bespoke management and leadership training to develop, both, current and future managers
- we continue to monitor key gender ratios in recruitment, development and employee turnover
